2. These seminars are attended by about a dozen senior researchers at the Institute. The format is for the speaker to make his remarks while the others are eating and then attempt to answer their questions while eating his own lunch. The atmosphere is highly informal. I spoke on this same topic to this same group at about this time last year. The response was excellent. While making my presentation and in the ensuing discussion, I was able to persuade a number of scholars that the Agency does reputable and responsible work.
